It's a day every wedding belle dreams of. A beautiful dress, sunshine, music, laughter, family, friends and – of course – the man she loves.

But for Friends star Courtney Cox it was one better – a dress rehearsal for the day in just a few weeks' time when she walks down the aisle for real with fiancé David Arquette.

Despite being surrounded by the cast and crew of their hot romance movie, The Shrink Is In, real-life lovebirds Courtney and David had eyes only for each other and played out their fictional wedding day just like it was the real thing.

As one insider tells Woman's Day, "They are obviously so in love – they laughed, kissed and danced until literally the sun went down. And even when the director yelled 'Cut!', they remained swaying in each other's arms."

Art imitates life as Courtney and David say movie marriage vows on an idyllic beach.

The beautiful scene for The Shrink Is In, which co-stars Aussie Kimberley Davies, was filmed at Rincon Beach, a famous Californian surfing spot just south of Santa Barbara. In the movie, the beach doubles for Belize, a tropical Central American country on the Caribbean.

And as our set insider explains, the on-and-off-screen lovebirds were even fortunate to be blessed by unseasonably great weather.

"In California we call this time of year 'June gloom', but as the sun set, the light was just beautiful and Courteney glowed," he says.

The wedding ceremony was filmed on a raised platform, but after tossing her bouquet, Courteney hit the sandy dance floor with David, swaying and hugging to the reggae sounds of love songs by Ziggy Marley, son of the late legendary singer Bob Marley.

And as the sun went down and the tide slowly came in, no-one could come between the happy Hollywood couple.
